Risk Factors

Purchase of SURS tokens is a form of investment activity. Thus, acquisition of SURS tokens is connected with all possible risks arising from conducting investment activities. Moreover, acquisition of SURS tokens brings additional risks that emerge along with the use of blockchain technologies and cryptocurrencies.

This report includes a list of major risks related to SURS tokens acquisition. Nevertheless, the list of these risks is not limited to the risks specified in the present report. The company is not liable for any adverse consequences, including any pecuniary or non-pecuniary losses connected with the occurrence of any of the risks not specified in the present report yet characteristic of investment activities of this kind.

Before deciding to purchase SURS tokens, it is recommended to examine carefully and weigh all the information specified in this report, as well as the information on the use of blockchain technology and the use of cryptocurrency found in other sources.

1. Early stage of technological development

SURS tokens are designed to develop a network based on blockchain technology or distributed ledger technology. You should participate in the purchase of SURS tokens only if you fully understand and realize that the use of these technologies is largely experimental and herefore poses a certain risk to the participants.

The early stage of technology development implies that this technology or software based on this technology may contain errors and other vulnerabilities that can make it difficult or impossible to use SURS tokens.

The SurruS project is based on the use of new technologies and business models. Therefore, a risk that these technologies and business models will not lead to the achievement of the initially planned results and financial indicators exists.

2. Dependence on the use of electronic infrastructure

The SurruS project depends on computer equipment, the Internet, electronic tools and applications. This implies that the company cannot guarantee that the disruption of their functioning will not have a negative impact on the use of SURS tokens or will not lead to their loss.

In addition, despite the fact that the company has taken all reasonable measures to ensure network security, the company's servers may be attacked using computer viruses or other malware, physical or electronic hacking, or other negative actions of similar nature.

In its turn, such negative impacts may lead to difficulties and delays in using SURS tokens, as well as their loss and suspension of services provided by the company in exchange for SURS tokens.

3. Possible functionality changes in the Ethereum cryptocurrency.

The purchase of SURS tokens is performed by using Ethereum. Consequently, any disruption or change in the work of the Ethereum platform may have a negative impact on SURS tokens use as well as on their cost.

In addition, any further advances in cryptography and further blockchain improvement may have a negative impact on the Ethereum price and the demand for technologies based on the Ethereum platform.

4. Legal regulation.

In some jurisdictions, there is no well-developed legal framework to regulate blockchain technologies, cryptocurrency and token transactions. Other jurisdictions may have loose or vague definitions in regards to blockchain technology regulation.

Therefore there is a possibility of a significant change in the legal regulation in the field of blockchain and cryptocurrencies. Which, as a consequence, may establish completely new rules for the use of blockchain technology and cryptocurrencies, acquisition of SURS tokens, including the risk of their legislative prohibition.

Such changes in legal regulation may necessitate a significant change in the company's rules for the SURS tokens purchase, as well as the rules for payment for the services provided by the company, including the provision of these services.

Besides, legislative restrictions can result in complete termination of all services in relation to blockchain technology and SURS tokens by the company.

5. Tax risks.

Potential SURS token buyers and holders may be subject to tax in connection to their token holdings, cryptocurrency transactions, and are fully liable for compliance with the tax code of their jurisdiction. They bear full responsibility for definition of their duties as taxpayers in accordance with the legal framework they operate within. The company does not act as a tax agent and does not provide calculations and/or tax payments for potential SURS token buyers and holders.

6. Disclosure of information.

Personal information received from the buyers of SURS tokens, including the information about the number of tokens and the details of the token holder's digital wallet, or any other information available to the company may be disclosed upon request of court or a competent law enforcement or other state bodies. In such cases the company has no responsibility for information disclosure for the reasons mentioned above.

7. Force majeure.

The company's activity may be terminated, suspended or changed due to force majeure circumstances.

For the purposes of this report, force majeure is construed as a range of events and circumstances that do not exist at the moment of this report and cannot be prevented by the company on its own. Force majeure circumstances include, natural disasters, wars, armed conflicts, mass riots, strikes, epidemics, and cessation of supply or restriction of supply of energy resources, Internet access termination or restriction, publication of certain acts by the State or municipal authorities.
